Kevin: “The other point that I wanted to make too is that a lot of concern comes with respect to well if a visually impaired student is involved in a work situation or in training situation, we want to make sure that he or she is safe and is not going to be hurt or that there’s not a dangerous situations that are around that he or she cannot see. And so that’s a very common concern that we get, and DBS is always happy to work with folks in education or employers or folks in other training environments to explain how those concerns can be alleviated.”
